Public behaviour

Describes the way individuals behave, communicate, and engage with others in scenarios involving larger groups or the general public.

Private behaviour

Relates to how individuals act in intimate or personal settings, where the audience is confined to a smaller, more familiar group, or when alone.

Perceived behaviour

Refers to how individuals are perceived by others based on their observable actions, communication style, and interactions.

Study reveals that a whopping 85% of individuals lack a true understanding of themselves.

Congratulations, {first name}!

You have successfully completed the workplace behavioural assessment.
Here are your results:

Public:

Refers to how individuals conduct themselves, communicate, and interact with others in settings that involve a larger group or the general public. It encompasses behaviour in professional environments, social gatherings, and situations where interactions are visible to others.

Note:

Your public, private and perceived behaviours could be all the same or all different. If you have all the same, it simply means you are more natural and have little/no adjustment at work and non-work. It's also normal if all 3 behaviours are different, it means you can adapt well at work and non-work; it's a little energy consuming, but you're doing great!

Private:

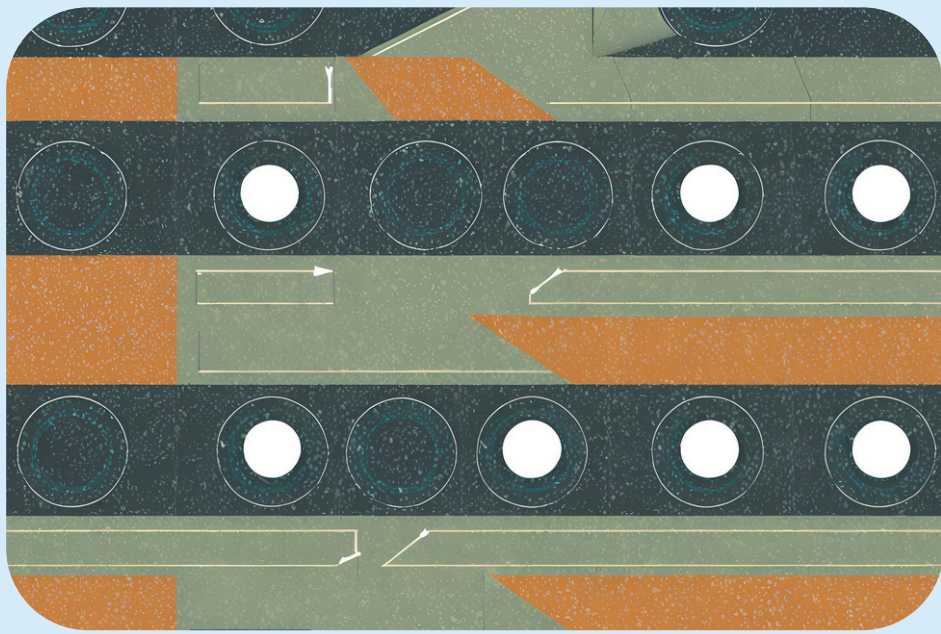

Pertains to how individuals behave when in more intimate or personal settings, where the audience is limited to a smaller, more familiar group or when alone. It reflects an individual's true self, including thoughts, feelings, and actions, in a more relaxed and authentic manner.

Perceived:

Refers to how others view or interpret an individual based on their observable actions, communication style, and interactions. It involves external impressions formed by others about an individual's conduct, attitudes, and demeanour.

As promised, these 3 results are provided free to you.
